

StreetEasy Debuts New Advertising Campaign in New York City

NEW YORK, March 10, 2017 /PRNewswire/ -- StreetEasy®, New York City's leading real estate marketplace, debuted a new out-of-home advertising campaign this week titled "Find Your Place", following the company's successful debut in 2015 with "Live As You Please" and subsequent campaign in 2016, "Find Your Formula."

"Find Your Place" showcases the array of amenities and options available to buyers and renters on StreetEasy and captures how each New Yorker's personal journey fuels their real estate search. The ads show how life experiences can dictate what people want or need in a new home, and how searching on StreetEasy can help you find it. Quippy text and wry realism are the focus of each ad, underscored by an illustrated cityscape of different home types found in New York City. These elements recall StreetEasy's previous ads, and embody the experience of any New Yorker searching for a new home.

Amenities such as "outdoor space," "laundry in building" and "doorman" are among the terms highlighted within the collection of advertisements.

"Searching for a home is a challenge and a journey, and StreetEasy offers a wide-range of New York City-centric search filters and content to help buyers and renters find the right place for them," said Susan Daimler, general manager of StreetEasy. "This campaign humorously depicts the different and ever shifting priorities that exist in a dynamic market like New York City."

Similar to the previous campaigns, this third iteration was created with Office of Baby. Ads will appear throughout the city with a focus on placements where New Yorkers spend most of their time: on the streets and sidewalks, in subway stations, subway cars, buses and taxis. The campaign rolls out this week and will continue through the spring shopping season.
